Set-Aside Alert news analysis:

What's in and what's out in NDAA

There are new rules to expand HUBZones and to increase micro-purchase and simplified acquisition limits.

There also are new restrictions on agencies from getting credit for small business contracts, and the SCORE program for small businesses did not get reauthorized.

Also, a Senate provision to lower the employees-living-in-HUBZone requirement to 33% was dropped.

Those are just a few of the latest developments in the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal 2018 (NDAA).

A conference of House and Senate members has negotiated a joint and presumably final version of the NDAA. Their Conference Report version of the bill, H Rept. 115-404, has been published online at <http://goo.gl/RxeFxA>.

The bill now goes to the House and Senate for passage, where it possibly could be amended. The final approved bill must be signed by

'Best-in-class' contracts are a trend

The White House appears to be shifting away from "category management" and toward a "best-in-class" contract approach in procurement.

The Office of Federal Procurement Policy (OFPP) recently sent out a draft memo outlining a policy of using so-called "best-in-class" contracts, according to FederalNewsRadio. Potentially, the next step could be establishing goals for agencies to meet in using such contracts.

The best-in-class contracts presumably would include the General Services Administration's "OASIS" professional services contract and the Alliant IT services contracts.

Will NDAA's 'Amazon' mkt. hurt small biz?

Even though the so-called "Amazon" marketplace provision in the latest version of the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) was watered down, it still presents a potential threat to GSA Multiple-Award Schedule contract holders, many of whom are small businesses.

The NDAA's Section 846 authorizes the development and implementation of one or more e-commerce platforms for commercial items that could be purchased by the Defense Dept.

Compared with similar language in the House version (formerly Section 801), the new NDAA slows down the development by requiring substantial legal and market research.

It allows the General Services Administration up to three years to roll out the e-commerce platform, which must conform to federal procurement rules. It calls for advice

Murphy at GSA appt. on hold

Emily Murphy's confirmation as administrator of the General Services Administration has been postponed by the chairman of the Senate Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee.

The committee was scheduled to vote on Murphy's and other confirmations in late October, but Chairman Ron Johnson, R-WI, has postponed the votes until he obtains certain documents he requested from the White House. The documents reportedly pertain to Congress' exemption from Obamacare.

the president to become law.

The legislation authorizes $626.4 billion for the Defense Department's base budget, which exceeds the $549 billion caps mandated by the Budget Control Act. The bill also has $65.7 billion in emergency war funds not subject to the caps.

There are several provisions affecting small business federal contractors.

SAP and micro-purchases

Under Section 805, the Simplified Acquisition Procedures threshold would be raised to $250,000, from $100,000.

In Section 806, the micro-purchase threshold would be increased to $10,000, from $3,000.

Both the simplified acquisitions and the micro-purchases tend to favor small businesses.

HUBZones

Section 1701 of the bill says that for a firm to be certified as eligible for HUBZone set-asides, 35% of its employees must live in a HUBZone. A Senate provision reducing that percentage to 33% was rejected.

The section also amends several HUBZone provisions in the Small Business Act.

- Amends the law so that HUBZone census tracts will be based on a five-year average of available data, rather than the latest available data;
- Amends the definitions of HUBZones for base closure areas and disaster zones;
- Allows governors to nominate new HUBZones in areas that are outside of urbanized areas, have fewer than 50,000 people and have an average unemployment rate that is at least 120% of the national average.

SCORE program

The House NADA would have reauthorized the Service Corps of Retired Executives (SCORE) program providing advice to small businesses until 2019. It also ordered SCORE to develop webinars and other online communications.

However, in the most recent version of the NDAA, there is no reauthorization for SCORE. It was not immediately clear what would happen to the program.

Small business contracts

Additional provisions affecting small business federal contractors include:

- Section 1703 states that agencies would no longer receive credit for small business set-aside contracts in cases in which the small business was acquired--and would no longer be deemed small--after the contract was awarded;
- Section 1704 sets out certification requirements for the Small Business Administration's Business Opportunity Specialists;
- Section 1705 outlines certification requirements for the SBA's Commercial Market Representatives;
- Section 1711 creates a pilot program to strengthen manufacturing for the Defense Dept. by small- and medium-sized companies;
- Section 1714 orders that in light of the recent increase in multiple-award contracts, the government must conduct a comprehensive study to determine whether small businesses are being utilized sufficiently in those contracts.

Other contracting provisions

- Debriefings: Section 818 provides for enhanced rights in debriefings. It says that for contract awards over $10 million and under $100 million, small businesses have the option to request the agency's written source selection award determination (with confidential and proprietary information redacted). In addition, it requires a written or oral debriefing for all contract awards of $10 million or more.
- LPTA: Section 822 makes it more complicated for agencies to use Low Price Technically Acceptable criteria in procurements.
- Bid protests: Section 827 sets from outside experts and says competitive acquisition procedures must be used in the setup. It also says sales data will be transmitted to GSA only. Many observers view Amazon as a top competitor for the e-commerce platform.

The NDAA says GSA must assess the impact on small business set-asides and GSA Schedule holders.

Meanwhile, specialists are warning small business GSA Schedule holders to monitor the marketplace development closely because it could have a major effect on them.

"Product companies must pay close attention to the creation of this program. It could have a significant impact on GSA product-based Multiple Award Schedule contracts," Larry Allen, a contracting consultant, wrote in his blog recently. "Working with GSA and whatever advisory panel they create will be essential to protecting Schedule investments and staying ahead of the curve to make any necessary adjustments to your federal business.

up a pilot program in which companies that file a bid protest against the DOD, and are denied, would have to reimburse the Government Accountability Office's costs for adjudicating the protest.

- "Amazon" marketplaces: Sect. 846 allows the government to set up at least one commercial e-commerce marketplace for procurements. The new language gives the General Services Administration authority to establish significantly more conditions and a longer timetable for implementation.

Prison time for Army contractor

A U.S. District Court Judge sentenced Bhupesh Wadhawan, former owner of Link Solutions Inc. in McLean, VA, to five years in prison for bribing an Army employee at Aberdeen Proving Ground, MD, to get federal contracts. He was ordered to pay $2,215,779 in restitution.

Rainier Ramos, a civilian employee, got two years in prison in the scheme. He also must pay $33,000 and $2.2 million.

Best-in-class contracts

The government would choose the best-in-class contracts through data analysis, according to reports.

Roger Waldron, president of the Coalition for Government Procurement, has predicted that best-in-class is likely to be a major federal procurement initiative. As such, it could replace the Obama Administration's category management initiatives.

In July, the Trump administration released a memo ordering agencies to use best-in-class delivery services. Waldron says that model is likely to be applied to other goods and services.

Agency and industry sources have pushed back against the best-in-class idea, saying that it does not take into account agencies' unique and complex mission needs.

"The OFPP/OMB are establishing a management framework that selects BIC contract winners and losers' based on government-unique processes and data reporting, rather than contract performance characteristics that deliver best value mission support," Waldron wrote.

Furthermore, the choice of best-in-class contracts as currently described requires no industry inputs, he added.

Column: The Land Mines of Unpopulated Joint Ventures

By Megan C. Connor, partner, PilieroMazza PLLC

The Small Business Administration has all but eliminated the populated joint venture (i.e., a joint venture with employees of its own performing direct labor).

As a result, companies that want to form a joint venture for set-aside opportunities and to not be affiliated with each other need to form an unpopulated joint venture.

While SBA's preference for unpopulated joint ventures is meant to benefit small business venturers and provide them with more hands-on experience, it creates wrinkles for the venturers.

Scope of Work

When an unpopulated joint venture is awarded a contract, employees of the venturers perform the work on behalf of the joint venture. Because the contract is held in the name of the joint venture, the venturers act like subcontractors in contract performance.

Often, venturers do not enter a separate contract with the joint venture specifying the venturers' work on behalf of the joint venture. There is no SBA requirement for the venturers to do so and, indeed, the joint venture agreement itself must specify the venturers' responsibilities with regards to contract performance.

However, it may be prudent for the venturers to contract with the joint venture. For example, if the joint venture is awarded an ID/IQ contract, the venturers may want to consider implementing an ordering procedure whereby, upon award of an order to the joint venture, the joint venture will likewise issue an order to each venturer specifying their respective scopes of work.

Profits

Another complexity of unpopulated joint ventures is the handling of profits. SBA's regulations make clear that each participant in the joint venture must receive profits from the joint venture commensurate with the work performed by the concern.

“One of the biggest hiccups for venturers (and potential venturers) is that the unpopulated joint venture they form cannot use the GSA Schedule contract of either or both of the venturers.”

But, more often than not, unpopulated joint ventures are pass-through entities in which revenues of the joint venture go directly to the venturers as compensation for their work on behalf of the joint venture.

For instance, if the joint venture bills its customer $1,000, of which one venturer did 40% of the work and the other venturer did 60% of the work, then one venturer is going to be paid $400 and the other is going to be paid $600, respectively. Such a scenario leaves no income at the joint venture level and, therefore, no profits to distribute. (Of course, if the venturers are paid in accordance with their workshare, presumably such payment includes profit.)

Sometimes venturers decide to have the joint venture apply a markup to their separate costs, similar to a prime contractor's markup on a subcontractor's invoice. In these cases, the joint venture would retain income, and any profit would be required to be distributed to the venturers commensurate with the work performed. If venturers decide to proceed this way, the markup should be addressed in the joint venture agreement.

GSA Schedule Contracts

One of the biggest hiccups for venturers (and potential venturers) is that the unpopulated joint venture they form cannot use the GSA Schedule contract of either or both of the venturers.

Rather, because the joint venture is an entity separate from its members, the joint venture itself must hold a GSA Schedule in order to pursue orders thereunder.

But it does not often make sense for a joint venture to go through the process of obtaining a GSA Schedule because joint ventures, by definition, are limited purpose entities.

Instead, GSA's contractor team arrangements, in which members of the team may utilize one another's GSA Schedules, are meant to be an option in lieu of joint venturing for GSA Schedule opportunities.

Facility Clearances

Sometimes solicitations will allow an unpopulated joint venture to rely on the facility clearance of one or both of the venturers for purposes of submitting a proposal. However, more often than not, the joint venture itself will need a facility clearance of its own in order to perform a cleared contract.

Importantly, an entity without personnel is ineligible for a facility clearance. Therefore, the venturers will need to "populate" the joint venture with administrative personnel who hold the necessary level of clearance—which SBA allows without rendering the joint venture populated. The joint venture's facility clearance will then be based on the clearances of these administrative personnel.

Conclusion

An unpopulated joint venture allows all parties to the joint venture to obtain hands-on experience on the joint venture's contracts. But the venturers must keep in mind that these entities create unique challenges that they should step through as they form the joint venture.

SBA advocacy office hires controversial economists

The SBA Office of Advocacy is being criticized for awarding a $136,000 research contract to two economists whose previous work was discredited by the US Congressional Research Service and others.

The SBA recently contracted with Nicole V. Crain and William Mark Crain to produce a study on the costs of regulation for small businesses.

The previous Crains' study that was found to be of questionable validity by CRS also was a study of the costs of regulation, performed in 2010.

CRS devoted a report to pointing out the flaws in the Crains' methods, resulting in unreliably high estimates of regulatory costs. The SBA also issued a statement "clarifying" the findings of the Crain's previous study. The Crains maintained their analysis was correct.

Regarding the recent contract, Bloomberg reported that only two bids were received.

An SBA advocacy official told Bloomberg that proper contracting procedures were followed for the contract.

The Coalition for Sensible Safeguards is accusing the SBA of potentially generating "fake news" if it contracts for research with economists whose methods previously were shown to be unreliable.

The Crains were not immediately available for comment.

Shoraka's tips on JVs

John Shoraka, SBA's former associate administrator for government contracting and business development, is offering a few tips on using joint ventures and other methods to help maintain your small business size status.

"Revenues generated by a joint venture only count toward the size of a small business in proportion to the work performed by the small business in the joint venture" Shoraka, now with PilieroMazza PLLC, pointed out in a recent blog.

He also discussed how a company that has grown large in one industry possibly can remain small in another industry.
